September 3.—The strength of the new Progressive party in its first line up against the old parties and the disappearance of the Republican majority for the first time in ten years and the first time in ten years and the first time in the history of the state in the history of the state on a presidential year were the outstanding features of the state election in Vermont today.

It was apparent early in the evening that there had been no election by the people, although a sufficient number of Republican representatives were successful to seem to ensure the choice of Allen M. Fletcher, of Cavendish, by the legislature.

For many years political students have pointed out that any decrease in the Republican majority in Vermont in September below normal of 25,000 has been followed almost invariably by the party defeat in the Presidential fight in November. These majorities, which have averaged close to 30,000 in all the state elections in Vermont in Presidential years since 1892, were represented to-day by a bare plurality.

The farming communities voted against the amendments as a whole. About a half state vote was cast. The initiative and referendum had been adopted, according to the first possible precincts out of 5.197 in the state. It received 63.093 votes for and 33.095 against.

The liquor license had been carried by 55.341 to 20.942. Corresponding majorities were credited to all of the amendments except suffrage and the amendments except suffrage and the good roads. The suffrage vote from 950 precincts showed 36.063 for to 55.139 against. The country districts were expected to change this result, however.

All of the labor proposals received good majorities.

Ten Thousand Gain Entrance to the Second Day—Good Flights and Races.

Lowering skies and intermittent showers analysiched between occasional appearances of sun rays had a tendency to keep down the attendance on the second day of the big state fair but it failed completely to dampen the ardor of the ten thousand or more who did brave the threatening weather. Long before old Sci started creeping up from the eastern horizon persons began their journey to the fair from distant points and quite a number surrounded the two entrances when the ticket sellers arrived to open up for the day.
